In this video, Yázhí Swarúu, a young alien, explains how cetaceans, especially dolphins, see and perceive the world. She also tells us how they perceive us, humans.

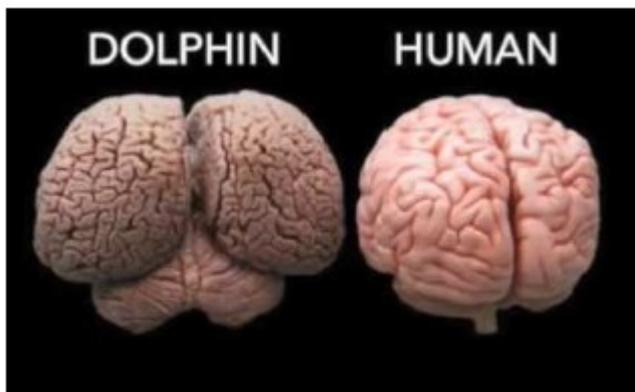

"This information is provided by extraterrestrial persons, women and men from the Taygeta star in the Pleiades cluster, through a written contact with us."

This information is from Yázhí Swarúu Tasherit

Plants are not only in fifth density, but as consciousness they are everywhere and being everything, too. Simply different from animals and what people might call advanced beings. But someone is not less advanced just because they don't have cities, spaceships, or computers. It simply means that you function differently internally as consciousness. When I say "everywhere," I am talking about your essence, your consciousness, not your body. I mean then that their consciousness in astral travel, to use as an example, makes them present in all densities, from the top to the bottom of the ladder. But, like I said before, there are no densities at all, just the idea that there are.

An example of this is cetacean species such as whales and dolphins that are mentally more advanced than humans on Earth. They don't need cities, or gadgets, or anything at all because they internalize everything. They are very mental, imaginative. They live in worlds created by the mind and share it with others like themselves using complex and very powerful telepathy.

With whales and dolphins' level of spiritual advancement, they hardly need anything outside of their own minds. Their brains are larger and more complex than humans. In their world everything revolves around their knowledge that being individuals they are also a whole, a being. So, they share their mental projections with each other. Ideal worlds, very fluid, peaceful. They love being in what we would call higher realms. In dream worlds. Always imagining perfection, as in perfect places to be. They revolve around love, around integrity. Expanding the perception of who they are, as individuals and collectively. They are always on high vibration or almost always. They travel a lot in their minds and pass complex thoughts to each other. But it is quite impossible to know exactly what they are thinking, but they are thinking a lot. They do almost nothing but think. They share concepts, reasons for what they experience during more thought processes shared or not. They are dreamers. They merge reality with their thinking, becoming one and the same. Their concept of reality is not as firm or as objective as it is for humans, since they are locked in their five senses thinking that there is nothing else, even when their instruments show them otherwise, they still do not want to or they cannot understand that there is much more to perceive as reality.

Humans are simply not equipped to understand these kinds of things, much less to chat with a dolphin. They do not think like humans, they are neither more nor less, just different. Imagination, thought and ideas, feelings and emotions are illogical reason for them. And that is the reality for a cetacean. I might know more if I could talk more telepathically to a dolphin because I did when I was on my island.

They view humans as very limited in mental awareness and spirit. They see humans as dangerously unaffected and ignorant, avoiding them as much as possible. They feel like they have no reason. They see their thoughts as chaotic, unstable and unreliable. For a cetacean, especially a gray bottlenose dolphin with whom I have had the most contact, humans can see, understand and be aware of a very narrow spectrum of reality and they lack all the capacity for introspection and are pathetic at swimming and diving. But a dolphin is a dolphin. They are empathetic and can't help but understand why humans are so limited and suffer for them. So they won't hesitate to help a human in trouble if they find one on their way.

Dolphins understand humans much, much more than humans understand themselves and even more than humans can understand a dolphin. A dolphin is almost the most advanced creature in Earth's oceans. And it hurts to say, but they are the most advanced creatures on Earth spiritually. Yet they still kill to eat. They understand why, they thank their fish and they understand that this is the way of life, the cycle. And they hardly ever bite them to kill them. They use advanced sonic weapons, compressed sound. This also helps them defend themselves from predators, which is why sharks flee from them.

A dolphin can kill a large shark from 30 to 40 meters away. They can stop their heart with a compressed sound from their specialized organ, the sonar, behind their forehead. They can use it as a scattering beam to find fish in the dark, to see the bottom of the ocean, to navigate around rocks in the dark just like a human submarine does, or they can focus the same sonar noises into one energy. similar to a laser. A bolt of energy with lethal precision. Human marine biologists know about this, but for some reason they decided not to make too much fuss about it, as if it didn't matter. So, the public hardly knows. However, many armies in the world especially Russia and the US Navy have used trained dolphins as weapons, but have abandoned their programs because the dolphins are not exactly obedient and see through them. They learn faster than their human masters so they stop cooperating.

Returning to their mind, there are hardly any words to describe their worlds. They simply float in the ether consciously without losing control of their body. While there are pure concepts. Connection between them and a desire to understand more. They are not exactly physical in their minds. For them, they live in their imaginary worlds where they float and swim between, what I can only call: space like water, without a surface, just a sea of ideas, perceptions and joy.

They aspire to understand everything. They don't need to use their dolphin body to perceive things as if they are acquiring new knowledge just that way. They access the experience remotely. They take advantage of the sea of knowledge that some call, in a limited way, the Akashic records. But not only of more dolphins, but of all the creatures and consciences that may exist. They channel everything and share their findings with each other.

They love their own personal touch of dolphin humor. To explain this, there are no words to describe it, imagine a dolphin transforming into what it imagines and flying. Swimming among the stars in a sea of color and brilliance. Looking for the understanding of the whole.

What they are on Earth, like a bottlenose dolphin, is only a very limited aspect of an extremely complex creature that is defined as being a mind and being that lives in its own dream. Within the different species of cetaceans I would not dare to say who is more advanced than who, but the species with which I have interacted the most is the Pacific gray bottlenose dolphin. They used to come to see me when I was on my island. And they always found it interesting for some reason. They sent me a telepathic message with something that can crudely be translated as: "Hey! You're not from here? Hear! Can you hear? That's weird!" I do not speak dolphin.

They do not have, nor do they need, a language. Although they do use coded sounds to communicate with each other over long distances. And the amount of maritime traffic, ships and submarines are making so much noise that they are making life very difficult for cetaceans. But they hardly communicate with sounds. I mean, they do a lot. But not in comparison to the amount of data and ideas they telepathically share with each other. And a concept is a concept. No words are needed. So I can understand their concepts, at least to some extent, and they mine. They were always around my island in small groups. I could see them playing in the distance jumping the waves.

When they were close, the sharks moved to the other side of the island. Clearly, they don't mix in the wild as dolphins are like the equivalent of someone always armed with an automatic weapon. Nobody messes with them. The teeth of a shark are no match for the compressed sound beam of a dolphin.

Regarding the killer whales, I would not even dare to say that they are on another level. Since, dolphins also kill. They are all carnivorous animals. They are different in their way of seeing things, the world, spirituality from what I could see, but I have not had the opportunity to be close to an orca as I have done with dolphins. I would say that dolphins are, in general, a little easier for all of us to understand than other species of cetaceans. Although, I did get close to a gray whale once. But he was busy rejoicing and jumping. Was young. I felt her very much like a large dolphin in mind. But those eat krill, not fish.

Do you know what is highly illegal, in many places, to interact with a dolphin? It is illegal to swim or fraternize with a dolphin. This is because they have very strong mind-opening effects on humans. Giving them mystical mind-opening experiences many times. Many humans are never the same again after being around a dolphin. So the cabal classified them as: "dangerous." Because they open human minds to other realms of existence. Humans become more spiritual, less materialistic, more imaginative when in contact with dolphins.

Regarding the confinement, the captive dolphins get sad, they see it as horrible. The worst for a creature that is so free and so aware of everything. But also, they see it differently from other animals and people. Because nothing can hold their advanced minds captive. Therefore, their body may be in a fishbowl, but their minds and consciousness will always be free.

Cetaceans are said to originate from the Sirius star system. But for me, they have always been in all the places where they can be. The concepts of: have always been, eternity, without beginning or end are difficult for humans to understand, fathom and imagine. They can call dolphins divine creatures since they are not quite in the physical. Mostly existing in higher planes.
